NOTES:
	(1) You can see this part in the photos. It is the plastic piece just below the sensors' chrome mount tube. This PVC piece serves two purposes, it electrically isolates the sensors from the pole, and it holds them firmly in place. I used a part from one of the two failed Acurite stations we had. You need something that can firmly hold the larger black iron pipe pole, and the smaller chromed tube that comes with the Sparkfun Sensors. There are a multitude of ways to accomplish this.
	(2) The actual number of conduit parts is completely dependent on how far your power supply is from the weather station.
	(3) This power supply was chosen because it is capable of functioning as a battery backup in case of power failure, and has an on-board remote controllable relay. Both features are important to this build.
	(4) This fan pulls air up into the chimney which serves two functions:
